From Your Pastor

By the end of Tuesday, all votes will be cast. No matter the outcome, I am more confident than ever that our nation needs the church to demonstrate what loving God with heart, soul, mind, and strength and neighbor as self looks like. Jesus said that this world needs us to be salt and light.

Recently I read a powerful essay written by Russell Moore reflecting on our current political season. Moore is the current editor in chief at Christianity Today and was the former head of Southern Baptist's Ethics and Religious Liberty Commission.

The article asked, "What is a win in politics?"

Moore's answer:

"Is (a win in politics) a vindication of who's right and who's wrong, a separation of the sheep from the goats, a final and definitive victory.

"If that's what we think winning is, none of us will win. We will just descend more and more into resentment and outrage. We will turn on those we counted on to give us what they never could, or we will seethe in our fantasies of "next time," when we (this time for sure!) will get that ultimate win.

"That's not what winning is. Until we lose that expectation, we will keep losing—not just as a republic but as people whose lives are meant to be about much more than keeping score.

"No one will win this election, ultimately. No one will lose this election, ultimately. Maybe we should ask whether we are seeking something where it can never be found, and ask ourselves whether we should be looking Somewhere else."

No matter the outcome Tuesday, let's love our neighbors, share the love of Jesus with the world, and trust the Lord God with our lives.

Blessings,

Ande
